Burial ground find sparks Romans or Dark Ages conflict

News report: an extensive burial ground found in trial excavations at Llandough, on land bought for a luxury housing development; archaeologists had uncovered 30 skeletons with traces of Roman timber buildings and fragments of Roman pottery in a 10-week dig by the Cotswold Archaeological Trust; the find “could prove to be one of the most important in... Free text from the archive preview: “The Glamorgan-Gwent Archaeological Trust is urging the council to order a halt to work on site. It’s believed the remains of up to 300 bodies buried between the 5th and 11th century lie beneath the now-demolished Great House Farm”
