2.1 Q&A — Reparations & Remedy

What does ‘reparations’ mean in this project?

Here it is used broadly to include possible forms of redress such as correction of the public record, recognition of historical loss, restoration where physically possible, recovery or preservation of records, and any legal or financial remedy that a competent authority or court might recognise.

Does restoration necessarily mean rebuilding the farmhouse?

Could a title correction be a form of remedy?

Could the public record be corrected without changing title?

Why include heritage recognition in a remedy discussion?

What is the restoration campaign trying to achieve?

2.1.1 Open remedy questions

- What remedies, if any, would follow if Parcel A were shown to have been omitted from or wrongly included in a later title?
- Which public records could be amended or supplemented to correct the historical record?
- What heritage or archival recognition could appropriately preserve the lost farmhouse’s history?
- Are any surviving parties, successors or institutions legally relevant to a remedy claim?
- What evidence would a court, tribunal, registry or public body require before considering any form of redress?
